The global history of art is replete with all manner of monsters. While many such creatures dwell in the far-off and fantastical domains of our imagination, they nevertheless migrate – physically and visually – from these extreme margins to the center of our world. Their presence is pervasive: They gaze down from atop monuments and invade the margins of books. But still other, real, so-called "monsters" have been identified among living societies. This seminar is dedicated to examining the form, appearance, and conceptual uses of a wide range of fictional and (quasi-)real monsters in the history of art, ranging from hybrid beasts (chimeras) that terrify and terrorize to "freak-show"oddities that simultaneously attract and repulse. What is a monster? What relationship does monstrosity have to the concepts of animality and/or humanity? In what contexts have monsters appeared in the history of art? To what uses have monsters been put?

The Napoleonic Wars (1803-1815) were nothing if not complex—an ever-shifting kaleidoscope of moves and intentions, which by themselves went a long way towards baffling and dazing Napoleon's conventionally minded opponents into that state of disconcerting moral disequilibrium which so often resulted in their catastrophic defeat. We will learn about the strategic situation in Europe at the beginning of the 19th Century, the concept of operational art that Napoleon helped develop and shape, and the organization, equipment, tactics, and logistics of European armies at that time. Then we will study the history of the most significant campaigns and battles of that period -- Ulm/Austerlitz (1805), Jena (1806), Eylau/Friedland/Tilst (1807), Danube (1809), Russia (1812), Leipzig (1813), and Waterloo (1815) -- by examining the strategic objectives, operational maneuver, battlefield tactics, and the outcomes of these operations. We will conclude with an assessment of the effectiveness of Napoleon's actions and of his contributions to modern military concepts.
