The Flesh Made Word: Women Writing the Body. In this course we will explore the ways in which women authors from the 15th century until today explore the body double, the grotesque body, and the carnal body in fiction, poetry, and creative non-fiction. We will consider each text (some in their entirety, excerpts from others) within its literary and social contexts to discover the significance of writng about the body as a form of subversion, protest, and inclusion.

In this course we will be lifting the veil and taking a good, hard look into the heartless voids and conspiratorial immensities of American culture via classic and contemporary epic American novels. We will set sail into monomaniacal madness as academic Ishmaels, unravel a narrative of cultural curse with our roommates as the cold creeps in, slip between beats in syncopated invisibility, race into the incestuous depths of Triple Crown glory, dissertate the legacy of Cold War hysteria, map the cultural wars of the living dead, and as Orphic travelers finally find ourselves deep in the paranoiac power struggles of the Underworld USA. To echo William Carlos Williams' introduction to Allen Ginsburg's Howl and other Poems: keep vigilant, folks, we are going through hell.

Whether it is the ballads of highwaymen and robbers of agrarian England or American sitcoms like Rosanne and Itâ€™s Always Sunny in Philadelphia, working class culture and literature radically express the rebellious humanity of those oppressed by the power of wealth and privilege. Starting with classic British industrial novels, like Eliotâ€™s Mary Barton, and moving on to works of the American Great Depression, such as Steinbeckâ€™s In Dubious Battle, up to Hank Williams and Notorious B.I.G., we will trace how the writing of working class culture creates a way of being working class. Free from the constraints of nationalism, we will also see working class life as a Transatlantic and then global phenomenon, essential for understanding post-colonialism, 21st century gender, and race. This class will be multi-media and utilize literature, critical theory, popular music, television, and film.* Working Class Literature	82680	3	MW	03:10 PM	04:30 PM	A014	404	JONES	LILA	14	14	0	Y

This course will explore the writings of female writers in Spain from the Middle Ages to the present day. We will study women authorsâ€™ participation in the development of different literary movements and genres, a contribution historically excluded from the canon. The readings will be supported by a diverse array of critical theory, spanning from structuralism to feminism. The goal of the course is to broaden the knowledge of Peninsular literature incorporating the subaltern voice of women throughout history. The student will be required to do presentations in Spanish on different topics. The class will be taught entirely in Spanish.
