SCALE DEVELOPMENT and REQUESTS: (continued)

Malkus, A. J. (1992). Adults' Attitudes Toward the Environment Scale; Home Environmental Practices Inventory. The AATES is a 25-item Likert-type scale, while the HEPI is a 10-item frequency measure. Since 2000, there have been 11 requests by other researchers to use one or both of these measures, including requests from several foreign countries (e.g., Australia, New Zealand, Estonia). In 2011, the scale was translated into Korean for use there.

Malkus, A. J., & Musser, L.M. (1992). Children's Attitudes Toward the Environment Scale. This 25-item Likert-type scale is copyrighted and was published in the Journal of Environmental Education in 1994. There have been more than 20 requests to use this measure since its creation, both in the U.S. and in several foreign countries (e.g., Peru, Canada, New Zealand, Taiwan, Turkey, Thailand, Australia, England, Philippines). The scale has been translated into Chinese, Turkish, and Thai for use in research in these countries. In 2008, there was a request from the Sesame Street Workshop to use this scale.
