Risograph is a popular printing method used by contemporary designers and artists to create illustrations, prints, zines, and books. Students enrolled in the course will be introduced to printing on the RISO duplicator. Concepts such as image planning, print planning, and registration will be covered through the creation of risographs, in the form of prints and booklets. ETSU Art and Design has a single drum RISO duplicator housed in the VRC for student use. This class will allow access to this machine, with careful instruction on how to use it to create risograph works.

Through a series case studies, drawn from distinct historical and cultural contexts, this seminar will address a critical phenomenon in the history of art: collecting. Class sessions will cover a wide range of topics, from foundational readings on the behavior/activity of collecting from a multi-disciplinary perspective (e.g. historical, anthropological, psychological), to focused examinations of collecting and the formation of collections in distinct contexts, to panoramic and diachronic considerations of the public and private origins of the museum and the archive as primary institutions in the art world. The course will culminate in examinations of the current state of collections and informed speculation about the future of collections — especially as they concern increased scrutiny of provenance and the ethical/legal issues surrounding the acquisition, retention, and display of art objects from diverse origins.
