ARTA 4957 Special Topics "The Print and Propaganda" Course Description: This course will explore the historical and contemporary use of printed imagery as it relates to propaganda. Students will research current social and political issues and utilize print media as a vehicle for voicing their opinion. Historical and contemporary references will be introduced ranging from the ancient world to pre-Revolutionary America to contemporary street art and all points in between. Students will be introduced to woodcut and screen print techniques. Group critiques and in-depth discussion of current socio-political concerns will be paramount to the success of this course. All levels of interest are welcome and no previous printmaking experience is necessary.

This course will explore the connections between the physical act of walking and the creative process of writing. The course will consider how walking functions in works of literature and how characters use walking to understand landscape and to amplify their worlds. In addition to classroom meetings, students will join the instructor on rambles through local landscapes in an effort to foster a stronger relationship between themselves and the landscape of Southern Appalachia.

NRSE 6956-901. This online course examines the concept of resilience for application to the individual healthcare provider, the interprofessional team, and application to patients/clients. Learners will explore elements of the Holocaust, with specific emphasis on survivor testimonies and written accounts to identify lessons that can be applied for the enhancement of resilience. Additionally, learners will examine the topics of research ethics, justice, leadership, and advocacy as they relate to their discipline.
