“Phenomenal Women”

Dear Friends,

“Women should be celebrated every day, but a month dedicated to female empowerment is extremely special. It doesn’t just honor the iconic women who have changed history, but encourages new generations to dream big and know that anything is possible”

– Molly McCook –

As we embrace the arrival of Women's History Month, it brings me great joy to extend my appreciation and admiration for the remarkable women who have made and continue to make a profound impact on lives, society, and the world at large.

This month serves as a dedicated time to celebrate the strength, resilience, and countless achievements of women from all walks of life. It is an opportunity to recognize the pivotal roles they play in shaping our communities, driving progress, and inspiring future generations.

Throughout history, women have faced and overcome significant challenges, breaking barriers and pushing boundaries ranging from discovering scientific breakthroughs, influencing major Supreme Court decisions, making history at the Oscars, becoming the world's youngest Nobel Peace Prize recipient to fighting for women's right to vote. Their contributions in various fields – be it science, engineering, arts, politics, business, or caregiving – are invaluable and deserve to be acknowledged.

Let us take this moment to reflect on the achievements of women who have paved the way for change, and to express gratitude to those who continue to lead, innovate, and uplift others. By recognizing and celebrating the diversity of talents and perspectives that women bring to the table, we strengthen our collective commitment to equality and inclusivity.

There are phenomenal women who have changed the trajectory of this world, including, but not limited to Rosa Parks, Amelia Earhart, Malala Yousafai, Serena Williams, Sally Ride and Katherine Johnson, to name a few. Though these individuals have made a huge impact in our society, there are so many other unsung heroes who are right under our noses who are making history in their own right.

Dr. Aruna Kilaru is a Distinguished Professor at East Tennessee State University (ETSU) and Faculty Fellow for Interdisciplinary Innovation in the Biosciences. She is noted for her remarkable contributions to the field of Plant Biology and Metabolic Engineering. Currently leading the establishment of a Synthetic Biology and Bioengineering Center at ETSU, her team recently secured over \$1.3 million in funding from BioMADE.

With a specialized focus on lipid metabolism, Dr. Kilaru has fostered a vibrant research environment within her ETSU laboratory. There, students and postdoctoral researchers collaborate to unravel the intricate mechanisms of lipid-mediated signaling and oil biosynthesis in plants. Through her mentorship, she empowers aspiring scientists, nurturing their passion for inquiry and academic excellence.

Beyond academia, Dr. Kilaru's impact resonates in science policy and national research initiatives. As an AAAS Science and Technology Policy Fellow, she influenced science policy at the highest levels. Her tenure as a Program Director at the National Science Foundation (NSF) further amplified her efforts to advance scientific research and education nationwide, reflecting her commitment to innovation and collaboration.

Recognized for her outstanding contributions, Dr. Kilaru has received prestigious awards, including the Tennessee Academy of Sciences Distinguished Scientist Award and ETSU's 2021 Notable Women of the Year Award. Her interview with Women in Plant Biology, a Plantae Blog, and featured cover story by ETSU Today underscores her influential presence in the scientific community.

Dr. Kilaru's journey embodies a steadfast commitment to exploration and collaboration, driving progress in scientific inquiry and innovation. As she continues to navigate interdisciplinary biosciences, her legacy inspires scholars and researchers worldwide, shaping the trajectory of scientific discovery for future generations.

May this Women's Month serve as a reminder of the need to continue supporting and empowering women in all aspects of life. Let us amplify their voices, champion their causes, and work together to create a world where every woman is afforded the opportunities and respect they deserve.

Here's to the extraordinary women who shape our past, present, and future. Happy Women's Month! As we take time to acknowledge and celebrate the many contributions Women have made throughout the history of America, let us not forget the university's values which include:

- PEOPLE come first, are treated with dignity and respect, and are encouraged to achieve their full potential.
- RELATIONSHIPS are built on honesty, integrity, and trust.
- DIVERSITY of people and thought is respected.
- EXCELLENCE is achieved through teamwork, leadership, creativity, and a strong work ethic.
- EFFICIENCY is achieved through wise use of human and financial resources.
- COMMITMENT to intellectual achievement is embraced.

Sincerely,

Dr. Keith Johnson

Women's History Month

As recently as the 1970s, women's history was virtually an unknown topic in the K-12 curriculum or in general public consciousness. To address this situation, the Education Task Force of the Sonoma County (California) Commission on the Status of Women initiated a "Women's History Week" celebration for 1978. Read More.

International Women's Day

In 1977, when the women who would establish the National Women's History Alliance began planning a women's history week, March 8th, International Women's Day, was chosen as the focal date. The selection was based on wanting to ensure that the celebration of women's history would include a multicultural perspective, an international connection between and among all women, and the recognition of women as significant in the paid workforce.

Celebrating resilience, and honoring the trailblazers

March is not just a month; it's a tribute to the extraordinary women who shaped history and continue to inspire change.

by Onyedika Peter Okonkwo

Happy Women's History Month!

Reflecting on my upbringing in southeastern Nigeria, tales of trailblazers who molded the future often filled our conversations. Among them, Mary Slessor stands out. While she may not be American, her significant role during the era when twin infants faced peril in the region is worth celebrating this Women's History Month.

Mary Slessor (1848–1915) was a Scottish Presbyterian missionary who worked in Calabar, in what is now southeastern Nigeria. She is particularly remembered for her work among the Efik people and her efforts to end the practice of killing twin infants, which was considered a taboo in their culture.

Born in Aberdeen, Scotland, Mary Slessor felt a calling to become a missionary from an early age. In 1876, she traveled to Calabar as a single woman to work with the Efik people. Throughout her missionary career, she became known for her strong personality, courage, and dedication to the people she served. One of the most significant aspects of Mary Slessor's work was her intervention in the cultural practice of killing twin infants. Among the Efik people, twins were often considered an evil omen, and it was a common belief that one of the twins was a supernatural being. As a result, both twins and their mothers were often killed.

Mary Slessor, through her personal courage and cultural sensitivity, was able to challenge and change this harmful practice. She adopted several sets of twins, cared for them, and demonstrated that they could grow up to be healthy and productive members of society. Her actions played a crucial role in altering the perception of twins in the region.

Mary Slessor's missionary work extended beyond her efforts to end the twin killing custom. She also contributed to the education and healthcare of the people in Calabar. She lived among the local community, learning their language and customs, and gained their trust.

Mary Slessor's legacy lives on, and she is remembered for her significant impact on the people of Calabar and her dedication to promoting social change and human rights in the face of cultural challenges.

This award recognizes a female staff member who has made a notable impact in the workplace and improved the quality of life for others whether through inspiration, service to ETSU, community service, support of women's causes or organizations, or professional accomplishments above and/or outside normal job responsibilities. To date eight exceptional women have received this prestigious honor. Previous award recipients can be viewed at <http://www.etsu.edu/wrcetsu/award.php>.
